ENTP 7300 Foundations of Entrepreneurship (3 semester credit hours) The seminar will uncover theoretical and empirical views of entrepreneurship. Students concentrate on the issues in the field and assess them using different methodologies. Students also examine future research questions and draft a research paper aimed at submission to a top journal. Entrepreneurship is inherently interdisciplinary and students should expect to see influences from the fields of sociology, strategy, economics, and organizational behavior. Prerequisites: International Management Studies PhD majors only and instructor consent required. (3-0)
